

Floodwood Adult Day Service

Mickey has been a Floodwood resident all his life and has been a prominent member of the community. Over the last several years, he has been increasingly affected by dementia and unfortunately his independence level has decreased. He was in need of continuous companionship, provided solely by his wife. It was beginning to take a toll on both of them, and when the opportunity to be a part of the Adult Day Service arose they were hesitant to take advantage of the service.

Because of the generous United Way funding, there were free no obligation trial days available and they were willing to try out the program. Once he got a chance to get to know the other participants and wonderful staff he was hooked. He has been attending for two months and has become a valued member of the ADS family. This has allowed his wife respite time, and she said that since attending she has even gotten the “old Mickey” back.
